Conservative Rabbis To Concentrate On Quality And Content Of Jewish Education

The problem facing the American Jewish community today is not assimilation or intermarriage, or "Jews running away from Judaism" as many believe. It is rather that of tens of thousands of Jewish parents and their children "running towards the synagogue", with the Rabbis and the congregations often unprepared to cope with the phenomenon, according to Rabbi Wolfe Kelman, executive vice president of The Rabbinical Assembly.

Rabbi Kelman's views were contained in his annual report to the 1962 convention at the Concord Hotel, at Kiamesha Lake, N.Y. The Rabbinical Assembly is the international organization of Conservative leaders. More than four hundred Rabbis from the United States, Canada, and Puerto Rico attended. The principal theme was Jewish education.

Rabbi Kelman said that those running towards the synagogue are looking for stronger identification with tradition and for answers to their many problems, or often just to find out what they should be perplexed about. He said: "We are baffled because we have been overwhelmed by this mass looking to us, and many of us feel so inadequate and unprepared to answer. The current generation may be identified as one which doubts its doubt, and is prepared to give the sympathetic benefit of its doubts in the direction of our tradition. They look to the Rabbis as a source of awareness and guidance.

"We know all too well how preoccupied we were with the devastation of Hitler and our commitment to the rebuilding of Israel," he said. "In less than three decades we have had to experience horrors [illegible] of other peoples over many centuries. It has been hard to digest and cope with the many problems and challenges of this experience. Theological problems and sociological revolutions which other communities dealt with over centuries and generations we have had to deal with in months and years. We are finally beginning to catch our breath and realize how many unsolved problems we must still face."

Rabbi Kelman recommended that every effort should be made by the Conservative Movement to seek the cooperation with the other existing agencies which have attempted to establish a system of dignified, responsible Kashrut supervision (dietary laws). He suggested the establishment of a National Better Kashrut Bureau whose aim would be to "educate the Jewish public about the importance of the dietary laws and to eliminate existing abuses in the present system of supervision."

He said he was encouraged by the fact that the convention was devoting its main efforts to Jewish education: "The Conservative Movement has always given this high priority, but I hope that we will now concentrate on the quality and content of Jewish education more than on the mere physical fact of getting our children to school for more hours in pleasant surroundings. It is the phenomenon of our time that we are dealing more and more with a Jewish community with extraordinary educational attainments and training in the humanities and science. A high proportion of our young people will be attending colleges and universities where they will be exposed to sophisticated and cultured teachers and fellow students. If they are exposed at all to literature, philosophy, and other humanities, they will discover the pervasive influence of Christian religious thought and culture in these areas."

"In the colleges and universities, with rare exceptions, they will learn little about Judaism as an adult religion, and often all that will have remained with them from their years of religious school attendance is a recollection of Jewish education which dealt with lovable tales about Abraham smashing the idols, a few ethnic jokes, and a very detailed, quaint Jewish cuisine: that Hamantaschen are eaten on Purim; matzoh on Passover; gefilte fish on Friday nights... It is not surprising that Judaism is identified in the minds of so many people with caterers, and trivial characteristics."

The president of the Rabbinical Assembly urged the Soviet Union to allow its Jewish religious community to invite synagogue leaders from the U.S. to the USSR in the same official manner in which the Russian Orthodox Church carried on a dialogue with its counterpart in America, the National Council of Churches. The plea was in Rabbi Edward T. Sandrow's presidential report. He said that a subcommittee of the Synagogue Council of America, which represents all trends in American Jewish religious life, had met with the Counsellor of the Soviet Embassy in Washington who denied the existence of a "Jewish problem" in the USSR.

"The whole meeting was a frustrating experience to me," Rabbi Sandrow said. "Yet, it is my feeling that the Soviet Union seeks the goodwill and understanding of all groups in America, both religious and secular. Reports have been published in the press that the synagogues and streets surrounding the synagogues were filled on Passover. Maybe the Soviet Union is unhappy with those officials who, in spite of a constitutional prohibition against anti-Semitism, have carried on an anti-Semitic campaign against our people."

The Assembly President praised the Supreme Court's decision on reapportionment as a "landmark in the constitutional history of America" and regretted that it was not yet time to applaud a victory for the King-Anderson medical bill for the aged, or for a strong civil rights measure. Rabbi Sandrow delivered a slashing attack on the "radical right" movement of "pseudo-patriots who have been attacking the Supreme Court, the State Department, universities, public schools, trade unions, and even religious groups." He warned that any minority can become "the easy target for the Birch Society, the White Citizens' Councils, and other such groups."

Eban And Prinz Warn Israel Not To Rely On American Youth, "Children Of Freedom"

Abba Eban, Israel's Minister of Education and Culture, warned in Jerusalem that Jews in the United States and Israel might be drifting away from each other to the detriment of both communities, says the New York Times. Mr. Eban, former Ambassador to the United States, spoke at the opening session of a three-day "dialogue" between Americans and Israelis sponsored by the American Jewish Congress.

"Generations are growing up in Israel and in American Jewry which are becoming alien and foreign to each other, sharing no memories, cherishing no common dreams," Mr. Eban said.

"Young American Jews," he added, "will not be held within the magnetic field of Jewish solidarity unless they become intimately involved in Israel's culture."

Dr. Joachim Prinz, president of the American Jewish Congress, said that in most respects he was in complete accord with Mr. Eban. But he declared that there was little sympathy to be found in the United States for the trend of religious affairs in Israel, especially the insistence of religious bodies on having a role in Israel's politics.

"It is in this area that Israel has disappointed us most deeply," Dr. Prinz said. "We who believe in the strict separation of church and state have little to say in favor of the role of Jewish ecclesiastic bodies in the affairs of the Jewish state."

He said it was recognized in the United States that this was a problem Israel had to handle herself. Yet American Jews had hoped to get a more inspiring religious message from Israel, Dr. Prinz said.

"For Israel's religious leaders," he declared, "the concern with ritual and tradition seems to outweigh the deeper concerns of peace and war, of justice and compassion, racism and prejudice, juvenile delinquency and other social ills."

"The 'word of God' as we define it and which we had hoped for, will, — during our generation at least — not come from Jerusalem," he added, says the New York Times. "We regret this and we hope that some day Judaism as we know it in modern postmedieval society will find a secure home in Israel," he said. "Only then will we be able to benefit from Israel's religious genius."

Both Dr. Prinz and Mr. Eban spoke in English. The three-day conference was attended by 500 persons, about half of them Americans and half Israelis. Small study groups were set up at the conference to seek ways toward better understanding and stronger relations between the Jews of Israel and the United States.

Mr. Eban said that while Israel had to strive for a normal position in the family of nations, she had to remember that she also had a unique and indelible place among the Jews throughout the world.

"The beginning of wisdom for Israel in her relationship with world Jewry and especially with American Jewry," Mr. Eban said, "is to abandon the premature and illusory pose of self-reliance and to stress the unfinished character of her major problems."

Dr. Prinz said one of the most important ties that must be formed between Israel and the Jewish community in the United States was an emotional one. I would say that emotions are not enough," he declared, "but I also say that without such emotions no relationship can exist. It is because of Israel that the Jews of America have more pride, more dignity, and more self-respect than ever before," he said, reports the New York Times.

Dr. Prinz warned Israel's leaders "against taking it for granted that they will be able to rely upon American Jewry in 10 or 20 years as they can rely upon us now." American Jewish youth, he said, are not children of the ghetto but "children of freedom, and if they are to love Israel they must be won by Israel."

The AJC president also warned against a growing American Jewish philosophy of "self-sufficiency" consisting of a belief that the community is "a self-contained religious sect without any identification with Jews outside the United States aside from, perhaps, philanthropic consideration."

Urging a new outlook by Israelis toward American Jews, says the New York Herald Tribune, Mr. Eban declared that "our business is not to lecture that great community about its own insecurity, or to surround it with predictions of liquidation and doom, or to hope [illegible] that we might become reinforced by its collapse . . ."

Tense Roman [illegible] Suffer Organized Fascist Attacks

The Jewish community of Rome protested against neo-Fascist "provocations" after two violent clashes in the midtown district of the former ghetto. Six persons whom the police described as Rightists were injured and one member of the Jewish community was arrested on a charge of resisting the authorities, says the New York Times. The disorders occurred after Rightist campaigners in the coming municipal election showed up near the city's main synagogue.

Several Jews were detained for questioning and most of them were quickly released. Strong police forces were in readiness all day at the approaches to the ghetto.

A new fight broke out when Rightists arrived for what looked like a raid on the ghetto. About thirty young Jews intercepted the intruders. Several persons on both sides were bruised before riot policemen, who had been standing by in the neighborhood, quelled the disturbance.

The area adjoining the city's main synagogue on the left bank of the Tiber was placed under special police protection. The area of the clashes is a lower-middle-class district with scattered slum pockets. It once was the compulsory dwelling place for Roman Jews and is still popularly known as the ghetto.

Many of the area's present inhabitants are Jewish. There are about 12,000 Jews in Rome. About a third live in the old ghetto. The disorders started when two aides with campaign workers of the extreme Rightist Italian Social Movement appeared in a square behind the temple.

The police said that angry crowds, including many women, attacked and mauled the Rightists. Later more such fights occurred in the ghetto. Toward midnight several hundred inhabitants of the district, most of them young people, marched to the nearby [illegible] the Italian Social Movement in the near-by Corso Vittorio Emanuele, where more scuffles took place, says the New York Times.

Salvatore di Stefano, chief of the Rome police, conferred with Dr. Elio Toaff, the chief rabbi, and other Jewish community leaders in an effort to restore calm. The agitation in the ghetto quarter subsided only in the early hours of the morning. Later the atmosphere was tense but quiet.

A statement by the Jewish community said that "violent reaction" of its members to any provocation were "inevitable" after what the Jews of Rome had suffered through under the Nazis and Fascists. The Jewish community paid tribute to the "tact" shown by the police in their intervention in the clashes.

More than 2,000 Roman Jews were deported to Nazi death camps during World War II.

Members of the Jewish community said the neo-Fascist propaganda in the ghetto quarter was clearly provocatory, especially on the eighteenth anniversary of Rome's liberation by Allied forces. The Jews said the Rightists had shouted anti-Semitic slogans during the disturbances and that a shot had been fired from a campaign auto.

Il Secolo d'Italia, organ of the Italian Social Movement, said that the Jewish inhabitants of the synagogue district had accepted the Right-wing electoral propaganda "without protest." The newspaper charged that Communist agitators had infiltrated into the ghetto and had organized aggression against the campaign workers.

The ghetto incidents followed a series of clashes during the last few weeks involving neo-Fascist campaigners, says the New York Times. The Italian Social Movement won 15.2 per cent of all votes in the Rome City Council election

Algerian Outlines Grim Prospect For Jews Who Remain

Jews who remain in Algeria after the Moslems take over control of the country will run the risk of being tried and executed on charges of having collaborated with the French against the Algerian Front of National Liberation (FLN). That is the grim prospect confronting an unpredictable number of the more than 100,000 Jews still in Algeria, says Joseph Newman, in the New York Herald Tribune. It was confirmed by an official Algerian spokesman in a WNEW radio broadcast.

A. Chanderli, New York representative of the FLN, said the European minority are killing Algerians every day "with the help of the Jewish minority." Asked if he meant that Jews were participating in the secret terrorist campaign, he replied: "Oh, certainly. Yes. It is even acknowledged by many Jews."

Under close questioning by Reid Collins, of WNEW, Mr. Chanderli acknowledged that the victorious Algerians would bring Jews and Europeans to trial. Would the number of executions run around 500 or 600 as in the case of Fidel Castro's Cuba? Mr. Collins asked.

"Five hundred or 600 is a small number," replied Mr. Chanderli. "After the French underground resistance to the Germans, according to French figures, over 50,000 Frenchmen were executed by other Frenchmen."

In a separate interview on the same program, Samuel Blumenfeld, secretary of the American Committee for France and Algeria, described Mr. Chanderli's statement as "a prelude" to an anti-Israel offensive by the Arab League, supported by Communist countries.

Sen. Jacob K. Javits and Sen. Kenneth B. Keating, Republican, N. Y., agreed that the situation was serious for Jews remaining in Algeria, says the New York Herald Tribune. Sen. Javits said, "It is a grave responsibility for all the nations of the world who had anything to do with the Algerian situation, including our own."

He suggested that the United Nations had a responsibility, and warned: "We've all got to be alert to action on a moment's notice."

Both Senators advocated international aid to those Algerian Jews who want to emigrate to Israel or elsewhere. Mr. Keating pointed to the facilities of the twenty-nine-nation Intergovernmental Committee for European Migration, with headquarters in Geneva.

He also suggested that direct contact be established with Mohammed Ben Bella, vice-premier of the Algerian Nationalist Provisional Government, says the New York Herald Tribune, with a view to averting unnecessary bloodshed.

Bride Is Daughter Of Lodge, Former Governor, Ex-Ambassador

Miss Lily de Pourtales Lodge, daughter of former Gov. and Mrs. John Davis Lodge, of Westport, Connecticut, was married there to James Lewis Marcus, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Arnold Marcus, of Schenectady, N. Y. The ceremony was performed in Christ and Holy Trinity Church in Westport, by the Rev. Edgar Lockwood, of Woods Hole, Mass., and the Rev. Dana Kennedy, of Westport.

The bride wore a gown of heavy, white, slipper satin with a short train. The gown was covered with heirloom Belgian lace. The headdress was a circlet of white satin on which were fastened tiers of fine white illusion net, says the New York Times. She carried three white Arum lilies as a bouquet.

Mrs. Leigh Ardrey, of New York, was matron of honor. The other attendants were: Miss Patricia Bosworth, of New York; Mrs. Richard Braverman, of Brookline, Mass.; Miss Ludi Claire, of New York; Mrs. Dexter Covell, of Westport; Mrs. Robert de Mailly, of New Canaan, Conn.; Mrs. James MacArthur, of Nyack, N. Y.; and Mrs. Charles Taubman, of New York.

The matron of honor wore a pale-green, silk, shantung gown; and a hat of lilies of the valley trimmed with green velvet ribbons.

The best man was George Arnold Marcus, of Schenectady, father of the bridegroom.

Ushers were: Louis Benoit, of Portland, Maine; Maurice Braunstein, of Schenectady; Robert Greer, of Chestnut Hill, Mass.; Michael Horn, of Bedford, Mass.; James MacArthur, of Nyack, and Roy Nevans, Jeffrey Rose, Charles Taubman; and William Court Cohen; all of New York.

A reception was held at Villa Lodge, on Easton Road, Westport, home of the bride's parents, says the New York Times. Wedding guests included: the bride's uncle, former U. S. Ambassador to the United Nations, Henry Cabot Lodge Jr., and Mrs. Lodge; Miss Helen Hayes, Miss Fannie Hurst, Misses Dorothy and Lillian Gish, Mr. and Mrs. Worthington Miner, and Miss Ann Harding.

The couple went to Bermuda on their wedding trip. They will live at 151 E. 92d Street, New York. The bride is a graduate of Rosemary Hall and Wellesley College. She attended the University of London and the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art in London. She is a member of the Actors' Studio in New York and has appeared on radio, television, in summer stock and in Broadway and off-Broadway plays. Her mother is the former Miss Francesca Braggiotti, of Florence, Italy, and Boston, Mass.

The bride's father, former Governor of Connecticut, was Ambassador to Spain for eight years. The bride is a great-granddaughter of the late U. S. Sen. Henry Cabot Lodge, of Massachusetts.

The bridegroom, whose father is a prominent Schenectady lawyer, is a partner in Chloridyne Chemical Co. He is a graduate of Albany Academy and attended the University of Pennsylvania, says the New York Times, where he was a member of Phi Beta, junior honor society; Kite and Key; the Undergraduate Council; and Sigma Alpha Mu.

An "Imposter" Reports

BY ARTHUR R. FREEDMAN, OF DETROIT, MICH., IN CRISIS, PUBLICATION OF THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF COLORED PEOPLE, REPRINTED BY KIND PERMISSION

My hair coloring is of a light brownish-blonde, my eyes blue, my height, an even six feet. If you were a tourist in Denmark and first encountered me from the other side of my desk in the Copenhagen travel agency for which I then worked, you would have little doubt of my nationality and lineage. Seeing me on the street in my Danish tailored clothes, you might preface an enquiry with, "Do you speak English?" Using my services as uniformed interpreter and hearing the guttural sounds which Danes understand and you do not, you would be convinced that I was Danish. The assumption would be incorrect.

I am a second generation American of Polish, Russian, and French extraction. Born and reared in the North, I attended universities in the West and South, graduating as a Bachelor of Education from a southern institution. I know America and Americans well: their regional likenesses and differences; their prejudices, good and bad; their pride and faults. I know them as a group, but more important, as individuals of fantastically diverse origins and fabrications.

For several years I worked in Copenhagen as an interpreter, greeting arriving tourists at the airport, train station, or pier, and conducting them to their hotels, and reversing the procedure on their departure. During the tourist season I made contact with several thousand Americans, almost all of whom considered me Danish. A goodly number took the trouble to inform me about America, its society, and way of life.

Capsule comments, thumbprint sketches, and standard clichés were the meat of their lectures. It was my private joke to act the part of an inquisitive Dane and draw out my fellow Americans. I was intensely interested in their comparisons of America to the countries that they had visited, their opinions of the nationals of those lands, and especially their originality in ascribing specific traits to individuals on a mass basis. I have heard the French denounced as thieves, the Italians as immature, the English as stodgy, but most enlightening of all have been the confessions of their own deficiencies.

The majority of tourists are busy devouring histories and statistics, enquiring after sights to see, and seeing them; things to do and doing them; seeking variety and entertainment and enjoying it all. They have little time and even less inclination for political and ethnological discussions. But there was a tiny group of "haters" that would rather inform than be informed; destroy beauty by comparing it to other beauty; ignore achievement by seeking out the active obsolete. From this group we were subjected to incredible comments of various sorts, not the least of which concerned racial matters.

It was my duty one evening, two summers ago, to escort a youth

CONSERVATIVE RABBIS

Noting that the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations had announced a campaign to help provide Jewish communities throughout the world with religious and educational leaders, Rabbi Sandrow recalled that on his return from the Far East earlier in the year, he had urged an end to competition for the affiliation of Jews in other countries to this or that congregational or rabbinical organization. He asked that the stress must be first on saving these communities for Judaism and then trying to mold them in our own image.

As to the world crisis, Rabbi Sandrow advocated the gradualist way to peace point of view of Professor Amitai Etzioni, an Israeli and professor at Columbia University. He said that this plan works towards the development of an international system in which conflicts are limited to non-violent means and which encourages an atmosphere in which freedom and justice are within reach of all. Rabbi Sandrow said that while preventive war is suicidal, total disarmament at present is unreal.

The "only effective means is a gradual movement towards peace through the development of channels of communication in which conflict after conflict vanish until the final day of relief from the tragedy of bloodshed," he said.

Brig. General David Sarnoff, chairman of the Board of the Radio Corporation of America, said that for the first time in centuries of Western civilization, the lines of world conflict are clearly drawn between those who believe in a Creator, and those whose only allegiance is to an atheistic state. General Sarnoff received the first Rabbinical Assembly Medal for outstanding contributions to faith and freedom. Guests of honor were: Rear Admiral George A. Rosso, chief of Chaplains, U.S. Navy; Brig. General Robert P. Taylor, Deputy Chief of Air Force Chaplains; and Colonel Charles McGhee, Senior Chaplain of the First Army Area. Rabbi Pinchos J. Chazin, of Philadelphia, chairman of the convention, presided.

"One of the ironies of our Western civilization," said General Sarnoff, "is that for centuries, as nations quarreled and fought with one another, each appealed the justice of its cause before the same Almighty Lord of Hosts. Today, we are spared any probability of re-living this emotional conflict. For our present adversaries have renounced the Creator. They have ruthlessly set out to destroy every religious instinct in their own people and others, recognizing that the doctrines of God and their own implacable dogma of man as the service tool of the State are utterly incompatible."

THE YEAR 1961 IN JEWISH LIFE

Jewish community. Otherwise, normal activities in the communal, education, welfare, etc., fields were maintained and, in certain instances, increased. The needs of Israel, due mainly to increased immigration, grew and a special $35-million emergency campaign was lodged in the U.S.A.

All in all, the year 1961 was rather hectic, mostly on the negative side but also with some positive developments. Except for the question of the swastika epidemic in the Sub-Commission for the Prevention of Discrimination and in the Commission on Human Rights, and continued discussions in the General Assembly's Third Committee on the Draft Covenants on Human Rights, without final action, and on the Arab Refugees, nothing significant, from the Jewish point of view, occurred at the United Nations.

group to a restaurant. The tour leader, a respected professor at the University of North Carolina, let the tour members dwadle in the hotel lobby while he pressed urgent news on me.

"H'ya, boy. Yuh jes let them all sit a-hungerin' awhile. Ah got somethin' Ah wanta tell yuh. You people probably wonderin' what we Ahmericans are thinkin' 'bout that Johannson boy beatin' that Patterson. (It was several days after the championship fight won by the Scandinavian hero.) Well, boy, Ah say any time a white man can beat one of them sweat-stinkin' niggers, Ah don't care if he ain't Ahmerican, and no one else does neither!"

I made no comment. Arguing a color prejudice that is so deeply rooted that it transcends national pride would have served no purpose. It has been proved long ago and many times that logic in such discussions (even with a university professor) has as much chance of winning a point as Marilyn Monroe's winning the Academy Award as best actor of the year.

It is conceivable that the national pride of this particular American was so affected that he managed to praise the Scandinavian winner only by relying on the trick of hating the losing American not as an American, but as a Negro. No one loves a loser, but few can manage to hate them. And then they must justify their hate! The professor's rationalizing exploded in a hate that could not wait for dinner. He had a compulsion to undermine the glory of a victory by pointing out the unworthiness of the conquered.

I have always been curious if his national pride reasserted itself when Patterson reclaimed the championship. I might have been curious as to how a real Dane would have reacted to the professor, but I know. On every occasion that I have related the story to Danish friends, their reaction has been disgust combined with that descriptive appellation, "The Idiot!"

Copenhagen's heart is the 118-year old Tivoli Gardens. It is my duty and pleasure to inform arriving tourists of the joy that awaits them within Tivoli's gates. A mecca of amusement that guarantees something to everyone's taste, Tivoli offers among other things free daily performances of classical pantomine, ballet, popular and symphony concerts, and an acrobatic show.

Beautiful floral arrangements, hanging gardens, and illuminated restaurants in the image of a Chinese Pagoda and the Taj Mahal provide thrills for those too timid to ride the roller coaster, loop-the-loop, gamble, see the Flea Circus or try to "ring the bell." Four and a half million people visit and exclaim over Tivoli every summer. I thought it impossible to hear a less than enthusiastic comment on this garden of enchantment. Recently I heard one. I now look forward to seeing an elephant fly!

Three middle-aged Clevelanders berated me for having so highly recommended Tivoli to them that they "wasted" an evening there. I expressed my regret for having been the indirect cause of ill-spent time, and received an astonishing response. The spokesman for the three said, "Oh, I suppose that it wasn't your fault. Tivoli's all right for you Danes, but an American can't really enjoy a place like that. Why, you know, if we had that Tivoli in Cleveland, only the colored people would go there!" One of the others qualified the statement thus, "Well, at the least 75 per cent would be colored."

What is to be deduced from these comments? That the four and a half million predominantly white persons from all nations who visit Tivoli annually really don't like it, and would not visit it in Cleveland except to express their contempt? That Danes and Negroes are of an equal mentality? That considering the percentage of Negroes to white in Cleveland, a fantastically disproportionate number of Negroes are willing to enjoy life? That three particular "haters" are so incapable of achieving pleasure that they have rationalized their lack into a racial snobbery?

An elderly Boston couple gave a part of the answer. A ten-minute taxi ride from their hotel to a boat provided the time for a lecture in hate to a captive audience.

"There were niggers staying in our hotel, dressing up and acting like white men. They've even got the nerve to eat at the Seven Small Homes (a first-class restaurant), and we saw quite a few in Tivoli. You're going to ruin your country just like we did ours if you don't put a stop to it! You can't stop niggers from traveling, now they've got that mick Kennedy's money letting them do what they please, but you can restrict your hotels and restaurants, and sure keep them out of Tivoli or no white people will come here, or

MONTREAL MEETINGS

★ JEWISH PUBLIC LIBRARY ★

Paid tribute to the late philanthropist, of Montreal and Ramath Gan, Israel, Yehiel Nahary who died in London, England, en route from Israel to Canada. L. Zuker, was chairman at the board meeting which recalled the career of Yehiel Nahary who was born Mendlaietzky in Stock, Poland, of a traditional Chasaidic family. He devoted himself to the advancement of Zionism and Jewish culture, and veterans of the Literary Club at Tlomatzkie 13, in Warsaw, recall his interest in Yiddish and Hebrew letters. He was in the foreign trade service of the Polish government and promoted business between Poland, Palestine, and South Africa. He received a high award from the pre-war Polish government for his success in this area. Before coming to Canada nearly a decade ago, Mr. Nahary (he changed his name to the Hebrew in Poland in order to underline his Jewish affiliations) had assembled a collection of art and precious, historical objects which he housed in part in Tel Aviv and in part in London. Much of this found its way to Montreal in recent years. Mr. Nahary took a special interest in securing from Poland a large number of Hebrew and Yiddish books which had survived the destruction of their previous owners at the hands of the Nazis. He thought that these volumes should find a permanent home in Israel or in the Jewish community of Canada, and he bought many of them as a gift to Israel, and others he shipped to Canada. The Jewish Public Library, of which David Rome is the director, received a collection of silverware which had previously belonged to Polish Jews. One of his gifts to the Library is a metal plate with applique designs depicting Biblical scenes, the handiwork of Persian Jews two centuries ago.

★Boris Brott, aged eighteen years, son of Alexander Brott, Professor of Music, at McGill University, and assistant conductor of the Montreal Symphony Orchestra, and Mrs. Brott, 5459 Earnscliffe Avenue, a Montreal music student, has won a £50 special prize in the competition sponsored by the Royal Liverpool Philharmonic Society. He was the youngest of five finalists among twenty-two competitors. In the final concert, he conducted the Royal Liverpool Philharmonic Orchestra before a panel of judges including the Earl of Harewood, cousin of the Queen; British conductor, Sir Adrian Boult; and Sir David Webster, administrator of Covent Garden Opera. The first prize of £400 went to an Austrian competitor; and the second of £200, to a forty-two year old conductor from Yugoslavia. The three remaining finalists, from the United States, Canada, and West Germany, were judged of equal merit and the third prize of £150 was shared between them. Boris Brott also was awarded a Canada Council Scholarship for a year's study in Britain. He plans to return here in September. Professor Brott, who last year conducted his own composition, "Spheres In Orbit," for the BBC, will also be in Europe in the late fall. Under a culture exchange scheme, he is making a concert tour of Russia, and hopes to conduct the Leningrad Symphony Orchestra.

Of course, I thankfully accepted this benevolent advice, which was offered in the interests of continuing Denmark's prosperity. Hatred is most agreeable when linked to economics!

There is a definite link in joining the southern professor, the midwestern trio, and the couple from Boston. Perhaps immediately less obvious than their animosity towards Negroes is their inability to find fulfillment through any channel other than hate. Joined together by the pity of the world, these people are apostles seeking disciples to their misery.

The quotations of hate were uttered by Americans to a man they considered a Dane, uninitiated in the morosity of sharing life with other ethnic groups. The question important to Americans, and the Negro in particular, is what effect these slanders have on people of other nations. Will the French, Danes, Germans, and Spaniards accept this hate as gospel? Need we fear that the bigoted minority will speak for the majority, who concern themselves so completely with their own affairs that they have little time to voice their prejudices, and no time to actively pursue them.

Prejudice is ineradicable. Johnny will hate spinach, but he probably won't comment on it unless it is served to him. He won't go off into a frenzy and try to destroy every spinach plant in the world. He won't object, although he might inwardly grimace, to see others around him devouring this vegetable that he detests.

He has learned to live with the knowledge that not all people like the same things — or people. Some Johnnies, a very few, not only dislike spinach, but all food. They experience no pleasure from taste, and try to sour the appetites of all the others who do. A man who can enjoy food will never be influenced by Johnny. He is incapable of losing his taste buds, but he can eliminate Johnny from his table.

The European reacts in much the same way. He is unable to accept another man's prejudice — even to be polite! Bigots are so unlikeable that rebuttal to or ignoring of them is natural. Pity for them rides in the wake. The Negro will not fall victim to a hatred sought by bitter-tongued Americans. Quite the reverse. The European subjected to a tirade of racial propaganda springs to the defence of the Negro, and condemns the bigot. The American image suffers only when a European is unfortunate enough to meet only "haters," and the chances of that are minuscule.

Why does an American try to force his hatred of Negroes (or others) on a European? Basically because he has nothing else to talk about. The man who deals in bigotry is uneducated to refinements, intellectually inferior, and out of his element.

Touring Europe because of his wife's whim, to keep up with or to get ahead of the Joneses, or for whatever reason, he removes himself for several months to an area that is not interested in baseball, the stock market, the rainfall in Pike County, or how much he won at poker last week. Unable to converse intelligently on subjects of general interest, he can rely on voicing factless and illogical hate.

A European might, and often does, express a curiosity as to the reasons for Little Rock and Montgomery. The displaced American tourist can tell them why it happened. The European learns more than was intended!

It is not necessary for us to be our brother's censor. A man is the summation of too many factors for us to judge all men by one. If a European were to accept one bigoted American as the stereotype of all Americans, the fault would be with the European. And to the psychiatrist with both of them!

Of course, stereotyping is a "haters" favorite game. Illustrative of it is this final story. Greeting an American client at the train, I called for a porter to assist him with his baggage. The porter wheels a huge cart which he loads with luggage from many persons, and takes all the bags out to the taxis in one trip. As he started to collect my client's bags, a Dane in the next compartment screamed that he should be helped first, because of the location of his compartment. He caused quite a scene, hurling insults in Danish at both the porter and me. His abuse did not stop until his bags were loaded on the porter's cart, and he realized that he must still wait until that cart was filled.

Not having understood a word of the verbal attack, my client expressed curiosity as to the man's behavior. I explained the situation, and then it was explained to me.

"That man's a Jew. They all act like that. I could tell by his accent. Don't you worry about those kind. They're all troublemakers." Several minutes late I left him at his hotel, where he informed me that the Danes were his favorite people, and he was most pleased to have me, in particular, to meet him at the station.

I thought about it a great deal afterwards. If the troublemaker at the station had been a Negro, my American client would have an easy identification for his shot of invective. But the trouble-maker was white and spoke a tongue foreign to American ears. And so my client identified a Dane as a Jew and duly reported the fact to an American Jew, whom he thought Danish. I was laughing so hard that I forgot to hit him.

Hate is, indeed, a ridiculous pastime!

Let Mourners Weep And Talk, Advises Rabbi

It is a mistake to follow the traditional dictum "don't make the mourner weep" when you visit a house of bereavement. Rabbi Sidney Greenberg, of Temple Sinai, in Philadelphia, points out that "tears are healthy" and that for a person who has just been touched by a great loss, to repress them is harmful.

"By letting them flow," he adds, "the mourner is achieving a helpful catharsis. They help wash away the bitterness from his heart and leave him strengthened for his ordeal. Judaism encourages us to 'weep for the dead.'"

Yet, before the funeral service, the Rabbi is almost invariably admonished, "Please don't make them cry." Some visitors to a house of mourning go so far in effort to "cheer up the mourner", says Rabbi Greenberg, that they turn the affair into a humorous recital of funny stories and hilarity.

Writing in the Temple Sinai weekly news bulletin, the Rabbi recalls, "I visited a widow the day after her home had been invaded by such cheerful comforters. She described her personal anguish at the levity which prevailed. 'It was almost as if they were mocking my sorrow,' she said. 'My heart is breaking and they are telling funny stories. For a while I wasn't sure whether they had come to a house of Shiva or to a Bar Mitzvah reception. I felt like taking some of my visitors by the scruff of the neck and throwing them out.'

"We can be most helpful by asking the kind of questions that will encourage the mourner to talk of the deceased. The mourners do not need a witty conversationalist. They need a friendly listener. Avoid sounding optimistic. Those of us who are frequently exposed to sorrow know that in the overwhelming majority of instances the bereaved recover from their loss and adjust to their new circumstances. However, the wisdom of offering such glib assurance when the wound is still fresh, is highly questionable.

"In the days immediately following the loss, we should concentrate on conveying our appreciation of the difficulties the mourners are facing and the burdens they are bearing. Instead of a cheerful 'Buck up, you'll be all right' try 'This must be very tough for you.' The first statement minimizes the loss and the grief. The second reveals understanding."

Yale Chaplain, Son-In-Law Of Jewish Pianist, Prays Against Race Prejudice

A prayer for opposition to race supremacists and individuals who "condemn Communism rather than practice Christianity" was offered at Yale University's 261st Commencement, at New Haven, Conn.

The Rev. William Sloane Coffin Jr., Yale chaplain, and son-in-law of Artur Rubinstein, the celebrated pianist, who received an honorary degree, delivered the invocation during a ceremony in which President Kennedy and thirteen other dignitaries received honorary degrees, says the New York Times. Dr. A. Whitney Griswold, the president of Yale, conferred 2,181 degrees and five certificates on graduating students.

Mr. Coffin, a 37-year-old Presbyterian, underwent imprisonment briefly in 1961 for taking part as a Freedom Rider in a challenge to racial segregation in a Montgomery, Alabama, bus station.

"Because we love the world," Mr. Coffin said in the prayer before 12,000 graduates and guests, "we pray now for grace to quarrel, O Thou, whose lover's quarrel with the world is the history of the world.

"Grant us grace to quarrel with the worship of success and power, with the assumptions that a man is less important than the jobs he holds; grace to quarrel with a mass culture that tends not to satisfy but exploits the wants of people; grace to quarrel with those who pledge allegiance to one race rather than the human race, with those who prefer to condemn Communism rather than practice Christianity.

"Lord, grant us grace to quarrel with all that profanes, trivializes, and separates men."

Participants included a fife and drum corps from Chester, Conn., and the Connecticut Concert Band. The audience joined in a psalm, "Thy praise alone, O Lord, doth reign," sung at the opening of the first college building erected in New Haven in 1718. The Rev. Dr. Gardiner Mumford Day, a fellow of the Yale Corporation, gave the benediction, says the New York Times. The ceremony closed with the traditional bell chimes from Harkness Tower.

U. S. Reform Rabbis Appealed To Israel To Commute Eichmann Death Sentence

The Central Conference of American Rabbis, in what turned out to be a last minute plea, cabled an appeal to Itzhak Ben Zvi, president of the State of Israel, asking that he commute Adolf Eichmann's death sentence to life imprisonment. Rabbi Albert G. Minda, of Minneapolis, Minnesota, president of the CCAR, and Rabbi Leon I. Feuer, of Toledo, Ohio, vice-president, made the appeal for clemency in a cable to Mr. Ben Zvi that was sent from New York four hours before Eichmann was hanged. The text of the cable declared:

"As the representative rabbinical body of American Reform Judaism, the Central Conference of American Rabbis, which supported Israel's right to try Eichmann and applauded the scrupulous fairness of the trial, but which is in principle opposed to the death penalty, we appeal to your Excellency to commute the sentence to life imprisonment."

The two rabbis, in sending their plea to the Israeli President, noted that the Central Conference of American Rabbis was opposed to capital punishment and had re-iterated its opposition in a resolution that was adopted in June, 1960, at its 71st annual convention held in the city of Detroit, Michigan. The Central Conference has a membership of over 800 Reform Rabbis in the United States and Canada, and is the world's oldest existing rabbinical body.

Twelve members of the Central Conference of American Rabbis, Reform group, have made public a cablegram they sent to President Itzhak Ben Zvi supporting his refusal to grant Adolf Eichmann executive clemency.

The message took issue with the one from Rabbi Albert G. Minda, and also signed by the vice-president, Rabbi Leon I. Feuer, asking President Ben Zvi to give Eichmann life imprisonment, says the New York Times. The former Nazi, convicted in Israel for his role in the death of 6,000,000 Jews, was hanged May 31.

In their cablegram, the twelve members said that the message of Rabbis Minda and Feuer "was the unauthorized act of two individuals, without polling the Executive Committee or membership of the Conference." The twelve also asserted that "justice was done in the specific instance of a legally-convicted mass-murderer".

The Year 1961 In Jewish Life

BY DR. NEHEMIAH ROBINSON, DIRECTOR OF THE INSTITUTE OF JEWISH AFFAIRS OF THE WORLD JEWISH CONGRESS IN NEW YORK

The year 1961 was, in a general sense, a period of anxieties and conflicts. These happenings cast deep shadows on the Jewish situation which, in addition, experienced a considerable number of events unrelated to the general world scene but which were as ominous as the consequences of the world-wide tension and stress.

1961 was dominated by the Eichmann trial. The fears expressed in many Jewish quarters about an upsurge of anti-Jewish action in the wake of the trial were generally unfounded. The number of incidents was comparatively small, involving mostly threatening letters, slogans, and so forth. A larger volume of such manifestations occurred in a number of Latin American countries shortly before and during the sentencing, but elsewhere no concentrated pro-Eichmann and anti-Jewish acts were recorded. The general feeling was that the trial was fair and served well the purpose of portraying the Nazi horrors against the Jews.

In general, 1961 witnessed a number of anti-Jewish acts in many countries, taking serious forms (car-bombing, etc.) in some places, such as Argentina. Compared with 1960, the number was small; in the entire United States, for example, 158 incidents were registered compared with 814 in 1960. The proportion was even smaller in other lands.

The prosecution of war criminals, in particular in West Germany, continued. Arrests, trials, and condemnations were frequent in the Federal Republic of Germany, where at the end of the year about 150 Nazis were under arrest and about 1,000 cases were pending. Some action was also taken in Austria, in the wake of the Eichmann trial, but other countries noted few instances of prosecution.

Neo-Nazi and neo-Fascist movements continued their activities with some meetings taking place on an international and local basis. An expansion of these activities was particularly noticeable in Austria, where, late in the year, a wide-ranging organization, stretching into Germany and also involving assaults in South Tyrol, was uncovered by the police. A number of arrests followed.

On a country by country basis, Algeria takes first place insofar as the seriousness of the Jewish situation is concerned. The rebellion in Algeria produced in its early years (1954-1956) no visible change in the Jewish situation. However, as of 1957, acts directed against Jews became part of the general violence and lawlessness and the Jews started feeling the squeeze from the two opposing groups: the Moslems and the French rightists. The situation worsened early in 1960 when serious rebel threats and acts became more or less the order of the day. Nonetheless, it was not until 1961 that the situation deteriorated to such an extent that the previous mood of "sticking it out" in Algeria changed to considerations of eventual large-scale emigration.

The year 1961 abounded in attacks, frequently fatal, on Jews in various cities and regions. Particularly grave incidents occurred in Oran, where, however, the Jews adopted some retaliatory measures against the Moslem terrorists, but in Constantine the attacks so seriously undermined the Jewish position that within a year the community was reduced from 18,000 to about 6,000. Schools lost most of their pupils; the cultural center closed; a number of rabbis and leaders of Jewish organizations left.

There were similar occurrences in neighboring towns. In Batna, for instance, the Jewish population was reduced from 1,500 to 800. Sétif, which in 1954 numbered 2,400 Jews, has now only about 700. Some Jews moved to the cities which were less endangered (mostly Algiers) but a considerable number emigrated to France and in part to Israel. Within the first seven months of 1961, more Algerian Jews immigrated to Israel than in the years 1956 to 1960.

The tribulations of the neighboring Jewish community of Morocco were almost as grave, although of a different nature. Basically, it was the problem or emigration and of Jewish status in the country which made life difficult in 1961. The year witnessed a number of arrests, trials, and sentences of Jews for "illegal" emigration and, in particular, for so-called "Zionist activities," that is, organization of emigration. The official attitude differed at various echelon levels, the upper grades being more liberal.

In the second part of the year passports began to be issued freely in Casablanca and some other cities, a fact of which some Jews took considerable advantage. This led to political attacks on the regime and, after about 2,000 had left within three weeks, a stoppage of group emigration was ordered in December. On the other hand, the semi-official newspaper, "Al-Alam", demanded reconsideration of the Jewish problem because the Jews allegedly do not want to be regarded as all other Moroccan citizens, and "serve Zionism" rather than their country. The Jews were also attacked for having participated in the Geneva meeting of the Executive of the World Jewish Congress. At the same time, certain Moroccan Jews were appointed to high offices by the Government.

The third North-African region, Tunisia, experienced somewhat less trouble during the year. The Bizerte incident between Tunisia and France created a difficult situation for the Jews who were accused of not showing sufficient support for Tunisia. Arrests of Jews without apparent reason, somewhat arbitrary condemnations and forced collections for the Bizerte fund took place. Demonstrations by students against Jews also occurred. The Jews responded with large contributions which were, apparently, an important factor in the improvement which took place in September. The incidents and the uncertainties led to increased emigration, involving several thousands. Postal communications with Israel were severed.

The Jewish community of Egypt which, since the turbulence of the Sinai campaign, had lived more or less unmolested in small numbers (5,000 to 6,000), received an economic shock by the recent Nasser sequestration measures. It is estimated that of the about 850 sequestration orders, some 350 concerned Jews. In other words, while the sequestrations were primarily a general measure, Jews (and other minorities and foreigners) became the prime target. Since those whose property is sequestrated are practically excluded from any gainful occupation and restricted in their emigration, the measure had a profound impact on the remnants of Egyptian Jewry. Communal life also suffered through the increase in Jewish institutions, and so on.

A dormant situation in Libya and Syria also changed for the worse in the last years. The clandestine (but apparently tolerated) postal communications between Libya's Jews and their Israeli relatives were severed and arrests (of Jews and non-Jews) ensued. Some new discriminatory measures against Libyan Jews were also reported. In Syria, the last vestige of civil status, the right to vote, was reportedly denied to Jews in the elections which followed the breaking up of the United Arab Republic later in the year. Life in Lebanon appears to have followed the same pattern of relative non-discrimination, except for some arrests for alleged assistance in emigration to Israel and participation in an "espionage net."

The Jewish position in Turkey underwent a certain deterioration, mostly on account of the general anti-minorities and religious policies of the Government. The basic difficulties arose from a Government order providing that each synagogue and institution be conducted as a separate foundation, the members of the governing councils be submitted to Government control, etc. This measure would, in effect, make nation or even city-wide religious, welfare, and cultural activity impossible. Although five Jews stood for election to the new Parliament, none was returned. Towards the end of the year there was an intensified anti-Semitic campaign in the press.

The usual pattern in the Soviet Union showed in the year 1961, on the one hand, a few signs of relaxation by permission to publish a bi-monthly journal and some other works in Yiddish. However, the arrest, trial, and stiff penalty imposed on the former head of the Leningrad (religious) Community, Pechersky, and two others for alleged espionage in favor of Israel, denied both by Pechersky and Israel; the dismissal of heads of communities in large cities; the continued closing down of synagogues, not to mention the conviction of persons with Jewish sounding names on charges of currency speculations, more than offset any "progress." There was no response to appeals by the World Jewish Congress and other Jewish organizations to Krushchev to ease the situation.

In the People's Democracies events were uneven. In Poland, the decrease of communal life was due to emigration, which in the first part of the year was still quite considerable but later diminished. The total number of Jews in Poland is about 22,000 to 25,000. Rumania relaxed her emigration han and the number of registrants for Israel soared, some of them suffering certain economic hardships. In Hungary no changes could be perceived, but in Bulgaria the Chief Rabbi was arrested and sentenced for alleged illicit currency dealings. Czechoslovakia released, in 1961, a number of Jews who had been imprisoned for years; otherwise the situation remained as it was.

In the Western World no particular events were noticeable. In Europe there was increased cooperation among the communities of the various countries in welfare and similar fields. France became, more than before, the haven for North African emigrants, and the community reached a practically record total. In particular in Marseilles, the gateway from the south, the number of Jews rose to 40,000 compared with some 8,000 in 1950. The financial burden on the community grew considerably.

In Italy, a priest, who defamed the Jews as "god-killers," was acquitted, creating an uproar in the
